STALLED TRUCK WITHOUT LIGHTS CAUSES BAD WRECK SUNDAY EVE ON LINCOLNWAY; 2 NEGROES HELD

Moonshine and bullets was the fare a stranger paid two negroes for giving him a "lift" in their Ford truck to Chicago Heights Sunday, according to the story told by the negroes, who were arrested for leaving their truck stand on the Lincoln Highway near the Willard Owen farm without lights, Sunday evening and as a result a serious accident occurred.

About 6:30 o'clock J. D. Miller of Glenn Ellen, driving a big Reo car, was going down the hill at the Owen farm, failed to see the stalled truck at the foot of the hill until he was almost on it. He attempted to swerve over to the left to avoid hitting the truck and in so doing struck a Ford going east which was being driven by Gustave Fink of Chicago Heights. The impact was so terrific that the Ford was turned over twice and thrown lengthwise across the pavement. With Mr. Fink, were his wife and three other members of the family all of whom were injured, Mrs. Fink being injured quite seriously. All were taken to the St. James hospital at Chicago Heights by passing cars.

With Mr. Miller were his wife and little daughter who escaped injury. The Ford was badly wrecked and the Reo car also was badly damaged. Part of the hood was bent in when the car side swiped the edge of the truck.

Deputy George Aschenbrener and John Frisch were soon on the scene and a search was begun for the drivers of the Ford truck. One negro was overtaken walking on the highway near New Lenox and the other negro was captured west of New Lenox. Both were brought back to Mokena and locked up in jail. Upon being searched a bottle of moonshine and a handful of 38 caliber bullets were found on them. The negroes then told a story of giving a stranger, who claimed he was from Kansas City, a ride to Chicago Heights and not having any money he gave them the moonshine and bullets as pay for his ride. The negroes claimed they ran out of gasoline and they were trying to find a filling station when arrested.

They gave their names as Lonzo Williams and William Dent and said they were from Joliet. The truck had no lights and no license plates, but had a "license applied for" tag on it.

The negroes were taken to Joliet Monday morning and turned over to the county authorities. They were given a hearing before Justice George Obstinick and placed under $1500 bonds each, which they were not able to put up, so they were placed in the county jail and their case continued for 10 days to await the outcome of the injured members of the Fink family.

Drive Car While Drunk; Arrested; Quickly Released

Monday evening about six o'clock complaint was made to Deputy Walter Fisher at Mokena, that a automobile was standing in the center of the Lincoln Highway at the same spot where a serious accident occurred Sunday night when an auto ran into a stalled truck. Upon reaching the scene, Deputy Fisher found two men dead drunk sleeping in the car. He placed them under arrest and brought them to Mokena where they were locked up in the village jail.

After sobering up they both said they were from Hammond, Indiana and had car trouble. They put up a sympathy story, one having an aged mother waiting for him, the other had a wife who did not know where he was.

Police—Magistrate John F. Schultz was notified of the arrest and set the case for a hearing for Tuesday afternoon at four o'clock.

Shortly after the men were arrested a number of Mokena men took special interest in the cases of the strangers and on Tuesday morning they brought so much pressure to bear on the deputies who made the arrest that they finally released the prisoners without giving them a hearing or fine. One of the reasons why pressure was brought for the release of the men is said to have been the alleged charge that the men were locked in a cold cell, that no fire was built in the jail stove and that the men did not get anything to eat until ten o'clock Tuesday morning.

Both men gave fictitious names it is said but later gave their right names which were not made public. They both claimed to be barbers. Their car was found to be in bad order and was towed in to the Cooper & Hostert garage.

Tinley Park Has New $15,000 Corporation

Tinley Park has a new $15,000 corporation known as The Tinley Park Real Estate Improvement Corporation. Those interested in the new enterprise are C. F. Bettenhausen, Henry Bettenhausen and Julius Schafer. The Corporation will engage in buying lots and erecting and selling new homes. Incorporation papers were received the past week from Springfield, Attorney A. H. Krusemark having charge of the legal end.

Bremen Twp., Farmers Raise Big Beet Crop

A number of Tinley Park farmers have taken up the raising of sugar beets as a side line and have found it quite profitable. It is estimated that about 10 car loads of sugar beets can be shipped from Tinley Park to the sugar factory at Riverdale this fall, a number of cars having already been shipped. This product brings $7.50 a ton and it does not take many to make a ton. One of the largest roots brought in, weighed 23 pounds. Some farmers put in two to ten acres of sugar beets, the largest acreage being planted by Wm. Siebrandt who raised 20 acres of the beets. This is a new crop which farmers have never raised here before and from present indications a larger acreage will be raised next year.

Frankfort P. O. Examination To Be Held Soon

At the request of the Postmaster General, the United States Civil Service Commission will hold competitive examinations to fill the position of postmaster at Atwood, Bourbonnais, Frankfort, Newark Pawnee and Wilmington, Ill. This is not an examination under the Civil Service Act and rules, but is held under an Executive order of May 10, 1921, providing for such procedure.

Postmaster Robert Stephen of Frankfort has stated that he will take the examination again for the Frankfort postoffice which is in the third class and pays $1400 per year. Applications must be in by Nov. 18.

Catholics Start Building New Hall at Mokena

The much talked of hall for Mokena is now a reality. A portable building 30x70 feet is now in course of erection by St. Mary's Catholic church on a lot near the church. A carload of lumber for the hall arrived Tuesday morning. A hard wood floor is being laid so that a good floor will be provided for winter dances. The first public affair to be held in the new hall is to be a play which it is planned to be given Nov. 17. There will be all kinds of bunco parties, plays and dances given all winter thru. This hall fills a long felt want and St. Mary's is to be congratulated for providing the much needed hall.

Birthday Parties

and Mrs. Robert of Mokena attended a birthday party in honor of Mrs. Herman Lorenz and her daughter, Sunday at her home in Joliet. The affair was a complete surprise. The rooms were prettily decorated in Halloween colors. Bunco was played after which music and dancing were enjoyed.

Later George Evans presented Mrs. Lorenz with a ternery, a gift from those present. Refreshments were served at a late hour to about thirty-eight guests. All enjoyed a pleasant evening and wished the celebrant many more such occasions.

Walter Fisher of Mokena attended a surprise birthday party last Sunday at the home of his sister, Mrs. Harry Berger in Chicago. Dinner was served to 24 relatives and friends. The room was prettily decorated in Halloween colors. A musical and vaudeville program entertained the guests during the afternoon and in the evening bridge was played.

Dairymen Hold Protest Meeting

Several hundred people attended the mass meeting of dairymen and business men of Frankfort held at the Frankfort hall last Friday night at which Mr. Green, president of the Milk Producers Association and C. M. Cleveland a member of the Association's legislative committee gave addresses pointing out the great evil of the tuberculin test as required by Chicago. The Bowman contract was also under fire and the dairymen were urged not to sign it. Resolutions were passed condemning the attitude of the Prairie Farmer and other farm papers on the tuberculin test. If the test measure is enforced it will end the dairy business say dairymen.

Mrs. Wilbur Meyers and her mother, Mrs. Conrad Sipple, left Tuesday morning for California. Mrs. Meyers spent several months here with relatives and Mrs. Sipple will spend the winter in the sunny clime with her daughters, Mrs. Meyers and Mrs. Koerner.

Mr. George Letts had as his guest his niece and husband from Webster City, Iowa, who are on their honeymoon. They also visited at the Chas Pfaff Jr., home and are now spending a few days in Chicago before returning to their home in Iowa.

Don't forget the bazaar of the Ladies Aid society of St. Peter church on Thursday Nov. 12 at the church. Supper will be served from 4:30 o'clock.

Chamber of Commerce Banquet A Success

The second Chamber of Commerce banquet held at the Oak Lawn Community Clubhouse, was a huge success. This time the ladies were invited. The banquet started with everyone standing and singing "America". Then they sang some of the old timers and popular songs led by Professor Goldsmith who was sent out by the H. W. Elmore Real Estate Company.

During the first course of the dinner, two young men played and sang duets, one played the piano and the other the violin, which was very beautiful, and they really made everyone listen to them.

During the first and second courses, Mrs. Walter Kaup of Oak Lawn sang "The World is Waiting for the Sunrise," and "Pal of My Cradle Days." Then they sang more songs out of a little folder which was furnished by the H. W. Elmore Company.

Following the banquet, Mr. Thompson, of the Illinois Chamber of Commerce, gave an address on the Chamber of Commerce and what it meant to men in business, and told the women not to fear for their husbands when they were at a Chamber of Commerce meeting because they were always in good company. Mr. Thompson also used Walter Dill Scott's story of the Twelve Months and Father Time to show what show of interest one has in their community. January and February didn't want Father Time to send them to Oak Lawn any more because it was cold and snowy and everyone was ill. But May spoke up and begged that he might be allowed to come to Oak Lawn because he liked it as it was so pretty and happy. Father Time decided that it's what you take or bring to your community that makes you either like or dislike it. Mr. Thompson's talk was short and snappy but right to the point.

Mr. John F. Curtis sang "I Want A Girl Like The Girl that Married Dear Old Dad." Mr. Curtis has a very wonderful voice and is very strong. His solo was very much enjoyed.

Mr. Smith and Mr. Walsh of the Public Service Company of Northern Illinois had a moving picture machine which pictures shown represented the time of Benjamin Franklin and showed how Franklin took the electricity out of the air by means of a kite with a small piece of wire on top and used hemp twine for the string on the kite for he

RADIO

Diagram Showing Arrangement for the Prevention of Oscillation in R. F. Sets, Using the "Anostat" Combination Control.

By HARRY J. MARX, in New York Herald-Tribune.

Resistance is an inseparable factor in all electrical circuits. It may not be there in the form of a rheostat, potentiometer or other piece of resistance apparatus, but every part of the circuit, whether it is just copper wire, connections, condensers, coils or any other unit, has some resistance value. It may be great or small, as the case may be, but it exists and is a factor in the circuit. Copper wire is a good conductor, meaning its resistance is low, while a noncondenser simply means something that has a very high resistance.

Present-day radio apparatus is so designed as to reduce as far as practical all resistance in the tuned circuits.

Oscillation.

This elimination of surplus resistance permits much sharper tuning and, therefore, improves selectivity. But in radio-frequency circuits it multiplies the tendency of tubes to go into oscillation, producing the assortment of squeals, howls and whistles which not only come out of the loud speaker, but back up and go out in the air to play havoc with the neighbors' reception.

The old and incorrect practice was to add a potentiometer in the secondary circuit of the radio-frequency stages. This was equivalent to replacing the resistance back into the apparatus. It reduced the oscillation tendency, but it likewise killed the selectivity that was desired and in addition materially reduced the volume. Resistance should not be added where it becomes an integral part of the radio-frequency circuits.

The fundamental cause of oscillation is due to a great extent to the amount of voltage across the plate circuit. If this voltage is controlled so that it can be adjusted to a value just below the point where oscillation starts then radio-frequency amplification can be used to full advantage. But this control must not be such as to add resistance in the tuned circuits.

Plate Voltage Control.

Oscillation can be effectively prevented if a variable resistance is connected in series between the plate or primary coils of the radio-frequency transformers and the "B" battery to prevent oscillation by reducing the plate voltage on the radio-frequency tubes. Now, by connecting a one-half mfd. condenser between the "B" terminal of the primary on the radio-frequency transformers and the filament terminal of the tubes, this artificial resistance can be shunted out of the tuned circuit. This condenser closes the plate circuit to the filament of the tube for the radio-frequency currents. In other words, on account of the condenser these currents do not have to pass through the resistance—hence the resistance does not affect the tuning and selectivity.

This variable resistance provides a means of reducing the plate voltage and therefore controls oscillation. This means of controlling oscillation was first utilized commercially by E. F. Andrews in the deresnadyne receiver.

The "Anostat."

Engineers have now developed the use of this by-passed plate circuit resistance as a volume control, as well as an oscillation control. This is done by using an extremely high variable resistance having a maximum value of several megohms. The circuit is just the same as for the control of oscillation. The first part of the resistance can be used for oscillation control, and the high resistance part for controlling volume. Volume can thus be adjusted without the slightest distortion, and with great saving in "B" battery current.

A combination control which may be used for this purpose is known as the "anostat."

HOW TO SOLVE A CROSS-WORD PUZZLE

When the correct letters are placed in the white spaces this puzzle will spell words both vertically and horizontally. The first letter in each word is indicated by a number, which refers to the definition listed below the puzzle. Thus No. 1 under the column headed "horizontal" defines a word which will fill the white spaces up to the first black square to the right, and a number under "vertical" defines a word which will fill the white squares to the next black one below. No letters go in the black spaces. All words used are dictionary words, except proper names. Abbreviations, slang, initials, technical terms and obsolete forms are indicated in the definitions.

HOW TO KEEP WELL

DR. FREDERICK R. GREEN
Editor of "HEALTH"

THE DEATH RATE AND HEALTH

HOW much sickness is there in any community in the course of a year? No one knows, for the reason that the only index of a community's health that we have at present is the annual death rate and, in many parts of the country, even that has only been known for a few years. It has taken many years to get laws passed and effectively enforced, by which records could be kept that would show the number of births and deaths in any city, county or state. Even now, it is not possible to determine accurately how many human beings die every year in the United States.

But even if it could be determined accurately, the number of deaths is by no means a positive indication of the amount of illness. Some diseases, such as common colds, have a very low death rate. They may be exceedingly common and may cause a great deal of suffering and disability and yet be responsible for few, if any deaths.

So a low death rate does not at all indicate a general condition of health. Naturally, it is impossible at present to know how much illness exists in any one state, to say nothing of the entire country. All that can be done is to attempt to get the facts for a small town and to strike a balance sheet for a limited number of people.

With this object in view, the United States public health service recently made a careful study of Hagerstown, Md. This town has a population of about twenty-eight thousand people. The survey included about one-fourth of the entire population and was limited to one thousand six hundred families, comprising about seven thousand two hundred persons, all white, of all ages, living under about the same living conditions. The survey covered twenty-eight months, three winters and two summers.

These seven thousand two hundred persons in twenty-eight months had 19,054 illnesses of various kinds, a rate of 1131 per thousand per year. This means that, on the average, every person in town had at least one illness of some kind every year. But only ten persons out of each thousand died. In other words, out of every thousand persons each year, ten died and 990 had some illness but recovered.

Of these 1,131 illnesses, nearly half or 668, were some form of respiratory disease, coughs, colds, bronchitis and pneumonia. One hundred and twenty were general diseases, as typhoid, scarlet fever and measles. One hundred and seventeen were diseases of the stomach and bowels. Forty-six were nervous, thirty-five were diseases of the heart and kidneys. Thirty-five were troubles with the ears and eyes.

So don't think that a low death rate means health. It doesn't, any more than the fact that no member of your family has died in the past year means that you have all been perfectly healthy.

SCHOOL HEALTH IN SMALL TOWNS

THERE is no longer any room for argument about school hygiene or inspection of school children. Twenty years ago, when the plan was new, there was much discussion. Today, every reasonable person, admits the need of well-built, well-lighted school-houses. They also agree that to send sick, weak or diseased children to school is a waste of money, and that the child should be as healthy as the school is hygienic.

The Oklahoma department of public health, in a recent bulletin, outlines a program which even the smallest, poorest school can afford.

This is a practical program for the small town or small rural school.

Three objectives are to be kept in mind. First, the elimination of disease; second, the normal growth and development of the child; third, the correction of physical defects that may now or later interfere with the health or efficiency of the child.

Even the smallest, poorest community can co-operate to carry out the following program:

1. Daily inspection of all pupils for symptoms of communicable disease; exclusion of all pupils with such symptoms.
2. Constant attention to the practice of health habits.
3. Special attention to application of good food habits, and arrangements for milk lunches at school, with hot lunches during the cold months.
4. Health records kept in the school; records of weights and measures recorded at least once a year.
5. Arrangements with local physicians and dentists for annual examination of our pupils.
6. Arrangements once a year for the engagement of a dentist and a physician for the correction of physical defects. (It has been demonstrated that this is a very practical plan.) Parents as a rule, will bear the expenses for the service.
7. Arrangements for rest periods at school each morning and afternoon for all children who are malnourished, overtired, nervous, or who have serious physical defects indicating need of special rest periods.
8. Special attention to the sanitary condition of all toilets and washrooms.

An Unflattering Light

William Jennings Bryan, a few days before his death, in Dayton, said to a correspondent:

"So you think that all this limelight is doing me good, eh? Well, a lot of it makes me feel like a doctor."

"Oh, George," said the doctor's wife, "and so you've actually saved old Mr. Million!"

"Yes," said the doctor. "I'm happy to say old Million is now out of danger."

"Oh, George," she said, "what a marvelous doctor you are. Oh, if I had only known you seven years ago. I'm sure that under your skillful treatment my poor first husband, Harry McMasters, would have been alive today."

Things for Radio Fan to Know About His Set

Radio receiving troubles are caused by installing unmatched parts.

An aerial that is badly corroded can be cleaned with a rag saturated with gasoline.

All circuits must be at least slightly regenerative to obtain maximum distance and volume.

When working about the set, always throw off the switch and disconnect the battery wires from the batteries.

Spliced wires should be soldered, to insure a permanently good electrical contact. The wire corrodes in time, making the contact less conductive, and causing loss of signal strength.

To find the positive and negative posts on a storage battery, dip the wires in a dilute solution of salt in water. Bubbles will form most copiously on the wire attached to the negative terminal of the battery.

Tube Is Not Governed by Brilliance of Filament

The effective operation of any vacuum tube is not governed by the brilliancy of the filament. As a matter of fact, one should never use the brilliancy of the filament as an indicator that the tube is working properly. Modern vacuum tubes have a coating placed over the filament which greatly increases the electron emission. The filament merely serves as a heater to generate the emission of electrons. One will find that with tubes using the coated filament the life of the tubes is not governed by the filament burning out, but by the loss or deterioration of the coating on the filament. When this happens the tubes will remain lit, but no signals will be heard.

Should Drill Panels in Horizontal Position

While the radio builder naturally places his panel flat on the bench while he drills it, sometimes the bench is so cluttered up with tools and miscellaneous parts that it seems more convenient to clamp the panel vertically in the bench vise. This practice should be avoided because there is always a tendency for the holes to drift downward away from the center punch mark just as the drill starts to cut in. The error produced in this way is usually less than 1-32 of an inch, but this is often enough to prevent, for instance, the mounting of a condenser.

Speaker Connections That Will Vary Pitch

Many radio listeners find that the pitch of the music received is above or below normal. An impedance placed in the speaker circuit will raise the pitch. With a switch to cut in condensers of different sizes as shown, the pitch may be varied at will.

Three changes are shown, the upper position with the smallest condenser giving the higher pitch. The lower position with impedance and condensers cut out and battery feed through the speaker gives the lowest tone. The switch requires two arms, the contact edge of the lowest being filed down to give clearance from the upper. The inner contacts should be smaller than the outer and spaced as close as possible to each other.—Radio Digest.

"Kilocycle" Is Taking Place of "Wave Length"

A new word, "kilocycle," gradually is taking the place of the word "wave length" in the vocabulary of radio fans.

The Department of Commerce has explained that the marking or logging of dials is found to have certain advantages in the new term "kilocycle," which means frequency, or the number of waves per second.

"Just as a musician," the department said, "can vary the number of oscillations of his vocal cords, but cannot control the length of the sound waves, so a radio station can vary the number of oscillations per second, and let the wave lengths be what they will."

To obtain the frequency when the wave length in meters is known divide 300,000 by the wave length in meters. The answer is in kilocycles. Likewise, the other way round, divide 300,000 by the number of kilocycles to get meters.

Making Christ Great

By REV. R. H. GLOVER
Director of Missionary Course, Moody Institute, Chicago.

TEXT—According to my earnest expectation and my hope, that in nothing I shall be ashamed, but that Christ shall be magnified in my body.—Phil. 1:20.

This text serves as a window through which we may look into the soul of the great Apostle Paul and discover his dominating motive.

The expression "earnest expectation and hope" represents an effort to convey the force of a Greek word for which we have no single word in English as a precise equivalent. Perhaps the word ambition, used in its worthiest sense, comes as near to it as any.

Unfortunately that word has been dragged down by association until today it has a somewhat doubtful flavor. But the word originally is a good word. Ambition in itself is not a wrong but a right thing. Few men, indeed, have ever achieved anything worth while in the world who have not been inspired and moved by ambition.

It was something akin to this, only on a spiritual plane, that fired Paul's imagination and sustained his heart through weary years of ostracism, persecution, suffering and arduous labor. A lofty ambition, a consuming passion ever filled his soul. Let us note his words:

"That in nothing I shall be put to shame." Paul had a higher ambition than to be saved merely in the sense of escaping hell and reaching heaven. He wanted to win out in everything that faced him all along the way to heaven. In the language of academics, he was not content simply to make a passing grade but must attain to the honor roll. In the language of athletics, he must not only win the game but win it with the highest score.

Paul seemed to conceive of the grace of God as a wonderful secret power of which he had been made possessor, and which he was keenly ambitious to put to every sort of test, so confident was he of its proving more than equal to any possible circumstance or condition of life. It was in one of the darkest hours of his experience that he gives vent to that lofty note of victory, "Now thanks be unto God, which always causeth us to triumph in Christ!" And again, calmly looking all opposing forces in the face and enumerating tribulation, distress, persecution, famine, nakedness, peril and sword, he shouts exultingly, "Nay, in all these things we are more than conquerors through him that loved us."

To avert defeat and failure was not in itself the final goal of his ambition; it was only a means to a still higher end, namely, the magnifying of Christ through him.

The phrase "that Christ shall be magnified" expresses the central thought of the text, the very zenith of Paul's ambition. The word "magnify" comes from two Latin words meaning literally "to make great," and the best force of the word is in line with this its derived meaning.

Let me ask you, reader, what conception the average man of the world today has of Jesus Christ. Does he not think of Him more or less as a vague, distant, mystical being with little or no relation to the practical affairs of everyday life? The aim, the ambition, the burning passion of every Christian should be to make Christ a living, bright reality to his fellowmen, to help them to know Him as intensely real, near at hand, related to our daily life, vital to our highest well being. This we can never do merely through the agency of preaching or the conventional channels of Christian work. Our lives, day by day, must be the effective medium to this end.

What is the greatest need of this sin-sick world? It is to see and know Jesus Christ in His beauty, His love, His sympathy, His power to save and keep, to help and bless. But the world may have a distorted view of Him in the character and conduct of those who bear His name. If Christians more truly transmitted Him through their daily life more would be attracted to Him and come to love and accept Him.

Finally, note the words "in my body." Too often has consecration been treated as a mere sentiment of mind. The only consecration which the Bible recognizes is a tangible, practical consecration which affects the body, and brings eye and ear, hand and foot, intellect and talent under His control and into Christlike relation and service to mankind. Let us then "present our bodies a living sacrifice" and "glorify Christ in our bodies" by "making Him great" before the eyes of men!

Lesson for November 1

THE FIGHT AGAINST STRONG DRINK

(Temperance Lesson)
LESSON TEXT—Eph. 6:10-11.
GOLDEN TEXT—"Be strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might."—Eph. 6:10.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Loving and Obeying Our Parents.
JUNIOR TOPIC—How to Be Strong.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Strong Armor for a Hard Fight.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Fight Against Strong Drink.

This is not a temperance lesson in the usual sense that it deals with intoxicants, but in the sense that it has to do with the believer's walk in conflict with the devil. Perhaps there has been no time when the evil one has made such a terrific fight as he is now doing in his attempt to nullify the Eighteenth amendment. The Christian has been saved by grace. Though his redemption is free, between its beginning and consummation there is a real, severe and protracted conflict. This conflict is most difficult and dangerous because it is not with flesh and blood, but with principalities, powers and spiritual hosts of wickedness in high places. Though the conflict is severe and painful, we should bravely battle on because the issue is sure if we go forth in the panoply of God.

I. The Source of the Believer's Strength (v. 10).

It is in the Lord. Only as the branch is united to the vine, or as a limb is united to the body, is there strength of life. We dare not attempt this conflict in human strength and wisdom.

II. The Enemy (vv. 11-12).

The enemy is the devil, a personal malicious being, with his many subordinates. His personality is proven by the names given him, and actions predicated of him. He has an exalted position, and is mighty in power, and all unsaved men are under his power. He is the original sinner, and is extremely cunning. He has power over death; enters into men; blinds their eyes; lays snares for them, and sifts God's servants. In carrying on his work, he has his churches and ministers. However, he is resting under a curse. The death blow was given on the cross, and he will receive his doom in the lake of fire.

III. The Christian's Armor (vv. 13-17).

This means that his weapons of offensive and defensive warfare are not of man's devices. Just as his strength is from the Lord, so is his armor. The believer dare not act merely on the defensive. He must attack his spiritual enemies as well as resist their spiritual attack.

1. A Girdle of Truth (v. 14).

The truth of God, sincerely and honestly embraced, alone will avail in this conflict. Reason, tradition, speculation and dead orthodoxy will fail in the crucial hour.

2. The Breastplate of Christ's Righteousness (v. 14).

As the metal plate covered the vital organs of the warrior, so the righteousness of Christ protects us from the enemy's assault.

3. Feet Shod With the Preparation of the Gospel of Peace (v. 15).

This suggests the firm foothold of the soldier and his alacrity—readiness to proclaim the message of peace.

4. Shield of Faith (v. 16).

By this he is able to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked. Christ is the object of that faith.

5. The Helmet of Salvation (v. 17).

Consciousness of salvation enables a man, knowing that he is a child of God, and fellow-citizen with the saints, to lift up his head with confidence and to vigorously assault the enemy.

6. The Sword of the Spirit (v. 17).

This is the Word of God, the Christian's offensive weapon; with it he can most effectively put his enemy to flight. This Christ used in the temptations in the wilderness, Matt. 4:4, 7, 10, 11. The church of Christ has won all her triumphs by the Word of God. Where she goes on using this, she goes on conquering, but when she falls back upon reason, culture, traditions, science, or the commandments of men, she goes down in defeat before the adversary.

IV. The Way to Get Strength to Use the Armor, and Courage to Face the foe (vv. 18-20).

This is by prayer—and prayer alone.

1. Every Variety and Method of Prayer Should Be Employed (v. 18).

2. He Prays for His Comrades, "All the Saints" (v. 18).

He sees all the believers standing shoulder to shoulder against the enemy.

3. He Is Persistent (v. 18).

Some Things to Beware Of

Beware of idle moments! Beware of the beginnings of evil! Above all, and more than all, beware lest you once admit the fatal intrusion of evil thoughts. In solemn and awful earnest I would say to you, "Watch and pray lest ye enter into temptation."—Farrar.

Eloquence

Eloquence is the appropriate organ of the highest personal energy.—Emerson.

Old English Law Based on Bible

"Benefit of clergy" was a privilege once enjoyed by the clergy of England, whereby they were exempted from civil punishment. The origin of this exemption is unknown, but the custom was probably based on the text: "Touch not mine anointed, and do my prophets no harm" (1 Chron. 16:22; Ps. 105:15). Edward I in 1274 extended this privilege to all laymen that could read. Such a criminal could not be put to death, but was to be branded on the left hand. The first verse of Psalm 50 was chosen as the reading text, and hence was known as the "neck verse." In 1691, this privilege was extended to women. The privilege eventually became a dead letter; it was variously restricted and finally in 1827 in the reign of George IV, it was abolished altogether.—Kansas City Star.

Had Him Coming and Going

The rather ferocious-looking husband who had taken his wife to the seaside scowled at an amateur photographer and rumbled in a threatening bass voice:

"What d'ye mean, photographin' my wife? I saw ye when ye done it."

The man replied gently:

"You're mistaken, really! I wouldn't think of doing such a thing."

"Ye wouldn't, eh?" said the husband, still savagely. "And why not? She's the handsomest woman on the beach."

Dairymen Just Consider This!

The Milk Producers Association is in receipt of a letter from J. R. Mohler, Chief of Animal Industry, Washington D. C. under date of October 17, 1925; in which he states that the last Congress of the United States appropriated $2,578,000 for use in payment of indemnity for Tuberculous cattle and that $220,000 of this amount is available for Illinois.

There is considerable discussion going through the country on the matter of available funds for payment of indemnities.

It is conceded that a much larger amount of funds than $2,000,000 is needed by the state to meet its share of indemnities and it is claim ed by some that the Federal Government will meet that amount. There now comes this statement from J. R. Mohler, Chief of the Bureau, that the Federal funds are $220,000 and that for the entire State.

In the face of this, where do we get off? $2,000,000 to meet the State's one-third, and along comes the Federal with their little pittance of $220,000 to meet their one-third of the loss. $2,000,000 appropriated $200,000 of this for over-head expense in handling the accounts, this gives the State $1,800,000 with which to meet its one-third of the indemnities for the reactors. $220,000 allotted to the State of Illinois by the Congress of the United States to meet its one-third of indemnities and that for the entire State.

The state will of course have $220,000 with which to meet the appropriation made by Congress and that amount taken from the $1,800,000 leaves $1,580,000 for the State to meet its own share (one-third and also the one-third of the Federal Government. Splitting the $1,580,000 into two parts, one to meet the state's share and one to meet the Federal share, (the state must meet both, when the $220,000 of the Federal Government is used up.) There is available for State work, $220,000 plus $790,000 or $1,010,000.

In the face of these facts, dare any man take a chance on signing applications to have his herd tested? 140,100 head of Dairy and breeding cattle signed up at the present so the Bureau at Washington reports, requiring $1,513,080 to meet the loss on these alone. $216,000 now being paid out on back accounts for which Congress did not appropriate in 1924, and this to come out of the $1,010,000 which leaves only $794,000 to meet the $1,513,080 already promised.

Bull No Match for Truck

Frantic with fear and rage, an Aberdeen-Angus bull which escaped the other day on the farm of Charles McDougall, Guelph township, Ontario, while being led to water ran amuck in the west end of the city, forcing all pedestrians in the vicinity to take to cover and endangering lives of children, says the Toronto Globe. The huge beast rushed about, defying half a dozen drovers who attempted its capture. It weighed 2,000 pounds, and was not subdued until it was knocked down by a five-ton truck requisitioned by the authorities for that purpose. Then it was quickly roped and brought into safety.

"IT'S SO LONELY"

SYNOPSIS.—Living in the small English village of Darbury, old-fashioned and sedate place, Barbara Stockley, daughter of a widowed mother, is soon to celebrate her marriage to Hugh Roodale, rich and well connected. Barbara is adventurous, and has planned, with an aunt, an airplane trip to Australia. Major Alan Croft, famous as an aviator, is to be the pilot. At her first meeting with Croft Barbara is attracted by his manner and conversation, different from the cut-and-dried conventions of her small town. They set out, Barbara, her aunt, Croft, and a mechanic. Word in a few days comes to Darbury that the plane is missing and its occupants believed lost. Croft and Barbara, after the wreck of the airplane in a furious storm, reach an apparently uninhabited island in the Pacific ocean. The other two members of the party had perished. The two castaways build a shelter. In Croft's absence Barbara is attacked by a cannibal. Croft rescues her. Croft discovers a party of blacks, evidently reconnoitering. Croft fixes up an electrical guard which scares off an attacking party. Secure from immediate danger, Croft and Barbara settle down to make the best of things. Croft already has recognized the charm of the girl and fears the outcome of their situation.

Strangely embarrassed, Barbara hesitated, uncertain whether to go or stay. She was in the act of turning away, when he lifted his head and saw her.

For a moment both were silent. In his face was the look she had seen there on the morning after the wreck. He rose to his feet; and, conquering her embarrassment, she went toward him.

"What is it?" she asked earnestly. He looked down into the misty blue eyes raised, full of shy sympathy, to his face.

"What is it?" he repeated. "H—! That's what it is." He stooped to pick up the fruit. "What are you doing here? Going to bathe?"

"I was," she replied, hesitatingly. "But—don't go. Can't we sit down and talk? It—it's so lonely."

Again he looked down into her eyes, almost hungrily. Nothing she could have said could have hit the mark with surer aim. But he clenched his hands and put them behind him.

She gave a quick look at his gloomy face, threw pride to the winds, and plunged with her old impulsiveness. "Can't we be—friends?" she asked.

He remained silent, with hands still clasped at his back, watching her curiously.

"I thought you did not wish it," he remarked at last.

She sat down upon a rock, abstractedly picking out bits of the moss which covered it.

"I've—forgotten that—" She paused, flushing. "If—we shared our thoughts now, things might not seem quite so bad," she suggested.

The ghost of a smile moved his lips. "You shall have more company soon."

"We are going to visit the natives. I have sent a message to the chief."

"About what?"

"To come to see me and be prepared to conduct us back to their settlement. To make friends."

"Friends! Those savages—"

"It's necessary. They leave us alone now through fear, which probably won't last. They will hate what they fear; and in time only the hate may remain. That's not the right keynote for a happy life here; is it?" He looked quietly at her, with a smile full of hidden meaning.

"No." She flushed a little; then gave a dreary laugh. "But I can't imagine what could be, in these circumstances."

"Can't you?" He looked away at the water tumbling over the huge boulder, catching here and there flashes of sunlight through the network of branches overhead. "You were going to find out all about that, in crowded cities; weren't you?"

"About what?"

"What the keynote is which you have found missing to the vast harmony of creation."

She glanced at him in pleased surprise.

"How nicely you express it! I never realized it so clearly as that; it was all vague. Yes, I suppose that is what I felt. It's strange, but I haven't felt it so much here."

She watched him collect his fruit.

"Have you found the keynote?" she asked boldly.

He looked at her for a moment thoughtfully; then answered, guardedly. "I know what it is. And I have only fully realized its necessity since—coming here! We all use substitutes out in the world. It has a lot of branches—or, rather, sub-keys. Perhaps few people ever discover it."

Well, Barbara, have your dip."

He was about to turn away; but, acting upon some impulse, paused behind him.

"Is it all very dreary for you—here? Do you hate it so much?"

There was a wonderful, unusual gentleness in his voice—an undercurrent of something, almost yearning, which touched her unaccountably.

"It's no worse for me than for you," she replied, responding to his tone in the natural generosity of her heart. He made no reply for a moment. Then, lightly, he pressed her shoulder with his hand.

"Come and tell me when the loneliness is too bad."

And he was gone, his footsteps dying away upon the loose twigs of bamboo cane.

She undressed and stood, fair and slim as Psyche, beside the water, a fresh interest awakened in her companion. As she lowered herself into the shimmering ripples, she resolved to follow up this talk, to press through this thin piece of wall; and, by a process of subtle siege, win the friendship which all at once seemed extremely desirable.

But, as usual, disappointment met her efforts when next she assailed the wall. The gap proved to be firmly patched up, even barred across. It was impregnable. Baffled, she could only finger the bars and wonder. . . .

The old chief appeared, keeping a safe distance, soon after receiving the white man's message. But an outbreak of sickness was raging in the settlement; therefore, much to the girl's relief, their visit was postponed. Having ascertained from him that no trade was carried on with other islands, that no ships came to the south, Croft threw himself with renewed zest into the building of a new hut. As if to drown all thought, he worked incessantly, sometimes moodily silent, sometimes seeming keenly to enjoy the new comradeship that had established itself, little by little, between them.

A month or more passed before the native chief's wrinkled black face appeared again, two warriors in attendance.

Croft thrust a hand through her arm, when they joined the natives; and again she was conscious of the old magnetic stimulation of his personality, which had sustained her during the first terrible nights and days.

VI

Fear and curiosity formed the chief elements of the unusual animation in the natives' settlement. Great bustle of preparation was in progress—spearing of fish, gathering of fruit, by men; while the smoke of many fires, ascending into the still air, indicated the occupation of the women.

Had not the chief ordered unlimited feasting to pacify the stomachs, music to delight the senses of the Terrible Ones? Baluaka, the stone god, looked incongruous among garlands of trailing vine and the feathery leaves of tree ferns. Before him stood the sacrificial table—a massive tree trunk stripped of its bark, upon which was piled a heap of dried sticks and undergrowth.

Baluaka ever demanded a sacrifice at full moon, and the moon was now at the full; and the people trembled, for the selection had been reserved for the Great White Chief, and who could tell what ruthless cruelties he might not exact?

Meamaa sat by her sick child and wept. People shunned her hut, although it was not yet proclaimed taboo. She knew well what was in their minds. With no superficial civilization causing them to hide their natural instinct of self-protection, they openly hailed this possible substitute for an offering. Some of her friends even taunted her with their hopes, if she appeared outside.

"A-a-a! a-a-a! Weep, Meamaa! The little one is with thee for the day; but, a-a-a! with the setting of the sun he shall become as the smoke curling up to the nostrils of the Great White Chief! Weep, Meamaa!"

Yet she was one of themselves, and the child a favorite. She thought none the worse of them; they knew not the art of wearing double-faced masks.

Meanwhile, the dreaded visitors were being escorted with some dignity through the intricacies of the thick inland vegetation. Although obviously terrified, the old chief bore himself well, maintaining a natural dignity with his humility.

Chimabaho, emboldened by a friendly overture, put into words a question which had long troubled him.

"Where dwell thy tribe, O Mighty Chief?" he inquired, with some trepidation. "No white warriors were visible around thy dwelling upon the coral shore. Do they, perchance, live in the rocks, or in holes deep within the earth?"

For a moment the other was mystified. Then, remembering the natives' tribal instinct, he seized this advantage and stood up, waving his arms as if to include the universe.

"My tribe," he explained equivocally, "is ever present; it ever surrounds us! Armed and ready at any moment to come to our aid, it waits, though invisible to mortal eye. Earthly habitation is not necessary for the White Chief's warriors."

The old native glanced about uneasily, a look of alarm overspreading his face. His sense of drama rising with the situation, Alan stretched out a regal hand.

"Peace, O Chief! Have no fear!

They will not touch thee without my command.

"I and my tribe would be friendly to thee and thine. Why hast thou been hostile unto us? Why has thou so tempted the wrath of the gods who sent us hither, by greeting us with spear and arrow?"

Chimabaho beat his breast, looking fearfully at Croft.

"It was the Vow," he said in a low tone.

"The Vow? What vow?"

"The Vow of Vengeance—of Hate!" The old man rose, and walked to and fro, feverishly pulling his beard, obviously laboring under some strong emotion. At last he paused opposite them, and they saw tears upon his wrinkled black cheeks. "Hearken, Great Chief!" he said. "The white man came before, not many summers past. He came in great numbers, and he kill! A-a-a! He let loose his magic, and he kill most of my tribe with his smoke! It hit them, making holes, leaving little hard ball-devils behind. Our homes were near thine own, even in the huts beside the waving palms. They also were shattered by the smoke and its ball-devils. My warriors lay dead, bleeding on the ground. Our women also, our little ones, they spared not!" He paused, overcome, for a moment.

Croft sat listening intently, with dawning comprehension.

"How did they come?" he asked.

"The lagoon was black with strange canoes, Great Chief. Beyond, near the big gap in the reef, floated an island. . . . A-a-a! a strange sight, filling the bravest with fear—" He stopped, again overcome, and turned away.

Hashtly Croft interpreted this conversation to the girl.

"Didst thou attack these white men first?" he asked.

The old man shook his head. "We feared their arrival! We but gathered together, outside our houses, to see the wondrous sight. The hand of Death has been heavy upon us, and we were small in number, even then. That day, less than half were left alive. . . . My sons were all slain. . . . The d-d murderers!"

"Thou Hadst to Learn the Fear of Us and Our Wrath."

Chimabaho looked up, startled by this burst of vehement English. Croft controlled his indignation, making further inquiries, which elicited the answers he expected.

"They were all men," the native told him. "After they had killed, they fled away to their canoes. They were covered with dark clothing, each like unto each. When they spoke, they spoke strangely—here, he stroked his throat, and their words were like the sounds, made by one whose stomach is too full, and who must return somewhat lying therein."

This vivid description of the Teutonic tongue convinced his listener.

"Ha! The d-d Huns! I thought as much." He again interpreted for the girl at his side. "Now let me think. We must turn this to our advantage. It proves what we talked about that evening by the river; doesn't it? The effects of our 'civilized' war were felt even here!" He ran his fingers through his hair, watching Chimabaho thoughtfully.

"And thy Vow was of vengeance upon all white men?"

"Even so, Great Chief."

"H'm! . . . His fertile brain speedily conceived a plan which, if wild, was yet founded on fact.

"Chief," he began confidently, "those white men who murdered thy sons were an enemy tribe, waging war against my tribe. And their ways were treacherous, their weapons terrible!"

Chimabaho was unusually intelligent for a native. Quick to grasp the meaning of this stranger, who spoke a dialect so much resembling his own, a flash of comprehension leapt into his eyes.

"And they came hither thinking to find thee here, Great Chief, so that they might slay thee?"

A smile lit up Croft's face. If not strictly accurate, this surmise would suit his purpose admirably.

"Even so! And, seeing thy tribe of a different hue, they were filled with fear and cried, saying 'Let us slay them'—he had a vague impression of Biblical eloquence, but it translated very well—"And they slew all thy sons in their fear; then ran to their boats. For their hearts are as the fermented breadfruit long stored in a pit."

Pausing to refresh his oratory, he proceeded to picture their mutual enemy in lurid colors, assuring the chief of their downfall. This gave him another inspiration.

"The gods sent us hither to tell thee that thy Vow of Vengeance had already overtaken the tribe," he announced coolly. "But, because thou camest against us, we could not carry out our mission. The gods were angered, therefore, and visited thy tribe with sickness. Thou hadst to learn the fear of us and our wrath. Therefore, Chief, see that thou and thine fall not again into sin by lifting thy hands against us, the friends of all the gods!"

This flow of eloquence made a tremendous impression upon Chimabaho. His relief was intense. That this god-like pair, with their wonderful powers, had come upon a mission of peace and friendship, inspired visions of renewed prosperity in his simple mind. Coming closer, he prostrated himself at their feet, in submission.

After this they set forth again. It was no longer difficult to make Chimabaho talk. His delight was almost childlike, resulting in a garrulity difficult at times to understand. But Croft realized that the little tribe, with the natives' melancholy sense of fatalism, had become convinced of its extinction, this conviction producing inertia. Apparently all attempts at cultivation had ceased, with all forethought for future generations.

When they emerged from the southern end of the forest, the little colony of huts came into view.

"The huts are deserted," Barbara observed. "Where is everybody?"

"Dressing for dinner, perhaps," he suggested lightly. "Oh, lord! I am dry. And they won't supply a whisky and soda! Celestial life has its drawbacks."

"I wonder what they wear?"

"Who? Gods?"

"No. The natives—for dinner."

He gave a shout of laughter, causing Chimabaho to jump with fright.

"Oh, just a reed or two, maybe. What we may come to, yet."

Barbara said no more.

The cause of the deserted appearance of the place was soon clear. Chimabaho led his guests around the western outskirts of the little settlement, toward the belt of verdure reaching down on that side almost to the lagoon. Here, in a large clearing used for council chamber, with carpet of moss, walls of lofty trees, roof frescoed with blue and green tracery, was assembled apparently the entire tribe.

Upon the white chief's appearance a wailing murmur arose, interspersed by the occasional frightened cry of a child. At a shout from their chief, they all fell upon their faces. Three times they raised their bodies, swaying backward, then down again to the earth. After the third obeisance they rose to their feet, eying the strangers curiously, fearfully.

While the old chief launched into a lengthy oration, and as she watched the varying expressions upon their faces, it dawned upon Barbara that these might be, henceforth, the only human beings in her life! This appalling probability shocked her, as she realized it, with almost the effect of a sudden, reeling blow. Shuddering, she turned from the small dusky bodies and looked at Croft's fine physique. His head was averted, his attention entirely engrossed by Chimabaho's gabbling speech.

Conscious of mental nausea, like one drowning, she clutched at the only remaining link with life—the companion destined to the same fate. For the first time in her life she called him by name, grasping his arm:

"Alan!"

Quickly he turned, in astonishment. "We may never see any other human beings!" she gasped.

With his usual swift penetration he understood, by the desperation in her voice and eyes, the overwhelming horrors raised by this thought. For a moment he hesitated; then, pulling her hand down into his, he clasped it close, saying nothing. At his reassuring touch the awful loneliness faded gradually, as the autumn mists when the sun breaks through.

A sudden outbreak of exultant cries rent the air. The lengthy eulogy came to an end at last. The pathetic relief in every swarthy breast manifested itself in wild leaps and jubilant shouts.

Croft, like Mr. Micawber, was not slow in seizing an opportunity for eloquence. Raising his free hand to command silence, he glibly reeled off other duties assigned to him.

It was, he stated confidently, the gods' desire that he and his wife should live upon the island to assist the tribe in the recovery of its strength and prosperity. This provoked more uproarious shouting.

Of course this state of affairs cannot last. It's against human nature. How would you write the next installment?

He dreams that Franklin comes to life and he then shows him what is now being done with electricity. He takes him to the power house at Joliet, then down Michigan Avenue where all the electric signs are. He then shows him the interurban train in the mountains and Mr. Smith explained the pictures and said that an engine coming down grade generated enough power to help the other engine to go up the mountain side. They then visited the foundry and smelters of ores and various other places. The picture was very educational. He was accompanied by a piano and a saxophone. Mr. Patrick sang "Marcheta", "Indian Love Call", "All Alone", "Oh Katharina", and "Strolling." Mr. Patrick's voice has such power that the hall vibrated when he sang. Mr. Patrick alone was worth the small admittance fee that was charged. The gathering ended with everyone singing "Till We Meet Again."

The tables were decorated with orange and black papers with small tea roses in vases and candles burning on each end. There were eight tables and over 158 guests were served. The Luther League of Oak Lawn Evangelical Lutheran Church are giving a Bunco party at the Oak Lawn School auditorium on Nov. 11th, at 8 p. m. Let's all go.

A correction is to be made in regard to the Bunco party given by the Alter Aids of Saint Gerald's Church. It was printed in the paper last week that Mrs. Knize won the second prize, but the reporter having been misinformed, wishes to correct this statement. Mrs. De Runtz won the second prize, and a Stork Shower was given in honor of Mrs. Knize and was included in the Bunco party.

Mr. and Mrs. Williams of Clarks-ville, Michigan, are visiting Mrs. Williams parents Mr. and Mrs. Singleton.

Mr. Bert Vegter and family, also Mr. Vegter's mother all of Melrose Park, were the guests of Mrs. Ida Rick for dinner Sunday.

An Achievement Meeting was held at the schoolhouse in District 138 on Friday evening, Oct. 23 under the direction of Mrs. Woodrich, teacher.

The first part of the evening's program consisted of a demonstration meeting by the Achievement Club in true parliamentary style and was very much enjoyed by all.

The other members are Rosine Bixler, Dorothy Eddy, Alma Andersen, Elda Schilling, Owen Maue, Evelyn Erickson, Alma Mae Bixler, Violet Knudson, Amanda Andersen, George Andersen, Mansfield Kohn, Mary Eddy and Richard Eddy.

Following the meeting, Mr.

Mueller, a Chicago educator, gave a very interesting talk to the pupils on "Labor". Miss MacMahon the Country Life Director also made a few remarks. She expressed herself as being highly pleased with the work of the one room country schools in her division. Mr. Mueller congratulated the district on its up-to-date school building.

ORLAND M. E. NOTES
An organization is being perfected for the handling of the Friday evening moving picture entertainments that will guarantee a better service to the public. A series of the very best and most widely known pictures are being booked with the leading moving picture producers.

The Men's Club of St. Michael's church at Orland are planning a poultry carnival on Nov. 7th at Woodman hall, Orland. There will be turkeys, ducks, geese and chickens. Music and refreshments are planned also.

Last Tuesday evening the adult Bible Class held its annual election of officers resulting as follows:

Frank Sayers, president, Mrs. Elmer L. Setterlund, vice president, Mrs. Kramer secretary and Mr. Hanson treasurer. Following the business session a pleasant social hour was enjoyed and an informal welcome given to the new pastor and his wife. After the serving of delightful refreshments the meeting adjourned.

Last Thursday evening Mrs. Elmer Setterlund entertained her class of girls at the parsonage. The class is planning to organize and will choose a name soon. Refreshments were served and a good time reported.

No Basement Required

If yours is a small house, bungalow or store with or without a basement you can heat it ideally with an ARCOLA Heater set in one of the rooms. Connecting Radiators heat ALL rooms alike—regardless of sudden weather changes. The automatic control stops the boiler of regulating the fire—saving heavily in fuel.

ARCOLA will last and give 100% heating service as long as the house stands. Easy to put in. Burns coal, coke or wood. May also be used with gas or oil burners. And its lowered price makes it a big-paying investment. Please ask us about easy payments. Write for (free) illustrated brochure.
